Birth of an Activist

Editor:

Recently you ran an article about the use of body cameras by the police ("Camera Questions," March 19).

I believe the Ferndale chief said they had been using the cameras for more than two years, but no one had ever asked to see them. An attorney representing me in a criminal case requested video from the Ferndale Police Department. The request was denied due to none existing.

Right about here is where my first draft of this letter launched into a rehash of all the negative contacts and complaints I have about the local police; and trust me, I have a few.

I re-read it a couple of times when I realized what was happening. I have reached the saturation point and am now ready to act. I will find and join others in my community attempting to make positive changes in the way police interact with society. I am an activist and as such...

Citizens of Humboldt! As Americans you must be concerned with all the reports of police brutality, both locally, and all across our nation. Folks, it is obvious the system is broken. The proof is in the personal experiences of our citizenry, backed by statistical data that cannot be denied. Historically, real change in America has always come at a price. That is already being paid in places like Ferguson, New York, South Central L.A. and, yes, Eureka. As a nation and as a community we will continue to bear this horrible price until we reign in the police. From the security guards to the CIA, change must happen! All Americans should receive equal justice and opportunity. I think it's a democracy thing!

I believe there's a local cop-watch. I'd like to invite any and all likeminded readers to join me in the effort for change. I'll be at the next Cop-Watch meeting.

No Need to Start from Seed

Editor:

I was pleased to see encouragement for the idea of seed swaps in the Journal last week, but disappointed that the article failed to note that there is already a long-established annual seed exchange in Humboldt!

In the article "Organize Your Own Seed Swap," (March 26) Heather Jo Flores encourages readers to "Look online and ask around in your area about anyone who has organized seed swaps in the past. It is better to help with a central, large swap than to have a bunch of small ones that aren't connected. If you can't find anyone who is already organizing swaps in your community, then you are ready to move on to Step 2."

Fortunately, there is already such a central, large swap for our area: the Humboldt Permaculture Guild's annual Seed & Plant Exchange, now in its 17th year and coming up this weekend! Everyone is welcome to attend this Saturday, March 28, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Arcata Community Center. Bring seeds or plants to share if you have them, but you can take home seeds and plants no matter what you bring. There will be live music, free workshops taught by local experts and a locally sourced lunch available. The event is free and all are welcome.

A Little Poem

The breath of the garden
has been steeped all night in wood smoke.
That'll be my morning tea.

Was I standing long enough to collect dew? Because water fell from my fingers, it's pent up things.

This Spring ground is still wet.
With not enough sunshine in the shadows things don't dry till summer,

But my garden drinks what I drop until my mind is clear of thoughts soaked in that dry Winter.

Connected Dots

I'm nervous. I was in a New Orleans hotel March 15. That's the same night that police arrested Robert Durst in another New Orleans hotel. And for the past few decades it seems that people, cats and dogs in the proximity of Robert Durst have ended up missing or dead in some weird way.

I don't want to speculate about how many people this crazy multimillionaire might have killed before, during and after living in our midst. That's what everyone else is doing. Actually, I do want to speculate, but I hesitate to do so in print, for publication. As a journalist, I'm trained not to presume. But as part of the population of human beings, I can't see myself as the only person out there refraining.

If you don't know what I'm talking about, you must be one of those people who never reads the news or tunes in to the news on TV or radio. You don't get Facebook or Twitter. Because Durst is what people are talking and tweeting about. You can't help it. The story is just too weird and frightening. Here is the quick recap for those of you who missed it:

The son of a New York real estate magnate, Durst's first wife Kathie went missing in 1982. Then in 2000, his best friend Susan Berman was killed execution-style just before a scheduled interview with police about Kathie Durst. In 2003, Durst shot his neighbor, Morris Black, cut up his body, dumped it into the Gulf of Mexico, and went on the lam until police caught him shoplifting in Pennsylvania. In what might be the craziest part of this crazy story, a Texas jury acquitted him. They believed his story that he was fighting Black in self-defense when the gun went off. We are talking about Texas, one of the most difficult states in the country for defense attorneys.

That's what we know. Then there is the stuff everyone is speculating about.

According to some news sources, Durst's brother says that Durst had seven Malamutes, all named Igor, who all disappeared within a six-month period. Judge Susan Criss of Galveston, who presided over Durst's acquittal, told TV reporters that she thinks it was Durst who put a severed cat head on her doorstep.

Newspapers like the New York Daily News speculated that Durst might be connected to the disappearance of Eureka teen Karen Mitchell back in November 1997 and San Francisco teenager Kristen Modafferi. In blog comments, people are questioning the suicide of a neighbor of Durst's when he lived in Trinidad for a few years.

The arrest that prompted all this speculation was for Berman's murder. And the arrest itself was prompted by a six-part documentary on HBO in which Durst's brother turned over new evidence he discovered and the film crew taped Durst in a bathroom muttering what some have interpreted as a confession.

For a journalist trained to report only what I know as fact or what some credible person says, all this speculation is hard to take. On the one hand, it's a big pile of suspicious circumstances that link all these disappearances and deaths to Durst. On the other, the coverage reminds me Gary Condit, the one-time congressman from Modesto who had the great misfortune to be having an affair with an intern when she disappeared in 2001 and was later found dead in a nearby park. The national press all but convicted Condit of her murder. But nine years later, it was another man, Ingmar Guandique, who was convicted of the murder in court.

For people still grieving over the disappearance of Karen Mitchell, this story and its coverage must be painful. Depending on how you read the stories, Robert Durst totally murdered Mitchell or there is little connecting him to the crime.

If you believe Durst killed Mitchell, you wonder how many other people went missing people because of him.

How do responsible journalists report all this? Do you stand by and let the tabloids and bloggers draw your readers away with every new, unproven news nugget? Or do you report it all, raising the fear level in your community and reopening old wounds as people start remembering every missing person, dog and cat from the time Robert Durst lived in our area?

And how much evidence do you need to start convicting people in the press? Condit ended up getting money out of author Dominick Dunne in an undisclosed settlement after he sued for $11 million in libel. The Durst story seems libel-proof — he's clearly in the public spotlight so he doesn't have the protections of a private citizen, and to prove libel you need to show that a story harmed someone. There isn't much harm you could do to Durst's reputation now. Once someone has admitted to killing and dismembering a neighbor, all bets are off.

To not report seems irresponsible. I wasn't here when Karen Mitchell disappeared, but I know this community. Everyone knows most everyone, or it at least it seems that way. This isn't San Francisco or Los Angeles. We trust our neighbors. I've stopped on my way to school and offered rides to students I don't know, simply because I know we are going the same way. I'd never do that in the city. My daughter knows not to talk to strangers. But must I tell her not to avoid her neighbor? Many people cross the street when they see someone who looks dirty and penniless. But I bet they don't cross when they see someone who looks like they have money.

So what's the job of the responsible press in the Durst story? It's the job of reporters to make sure readers and listeners know the difference between what's fact and what's speculation.

We wouldn't be talking about any of this, were it not for filmmaker Andrew Jarecki, who directed The Jinx, about Durst, for HBO. You wonder how much incentive police ever have for solving missing persons and difficult-to-solve murders without pesky journalists following the cases. In towns without newspapers, TV stations or Internet news sites, how many more missing persons cases gather dust in police file boxes?

The press reported that Durst had dinner at Emeril's in New Orleans the night he was arrested. That's the same night I was wandering the streets of the French Quarter looking for a place to eat. There are signs posted throughout the Quarter warning tourists to walk in big groups. I assumed that was because of pickpockets, purse snatchers and armed robbers. I wasn't keeping an eye out for the creepy rich guy around the corner. ●

Violence Foreshadowed

A Fortuna shooting brings a national epidemic into local focus

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

It's January 2013, and local healthcare worker Russell Kellim is writing a sworn statement to a Humboldt County Superior Court judge who's considering issuing a domestic violence restraining order against him. Csilla Adam, the mother of Kellim's 5-week-old daughter, filed for the order a few weeks earlier, alleging that Kellim hit her on numerous occasions and was "manipulative, conning, controlling, aggressive, violent and possessive toward women." He was armed, too, Adam alleged, noting repeatedly in a sworn statement that she was afraid Kellim was going to "shoot me and leave me to die somewhere remote."

In response, Kellim tells the court he's never been abusive and that "each and every incident of domestic violence alleged by Mrs. Adam is the result of her mental health issues" and a product of her "distorted view of reality." He tells the court that he gave the only two guns he owns — a matte black .380 caliber Smith and Wesson and a nickel-plated .380 caliber Bersa, both handguns — to his adult daughter as Christmas gifts a month earlier. He finishes with an allegation that Adam is unfit to safely care for their daughter, and urges the court to grant an order giving him full custody of the infant and denying Adam any visitation rights.

Less than a week after Kellim files his reply, Adam withdraws the restraining order request.

A little more than two years later — on March 18 — five gunshots broke the pre-dawn quiet of a gated community in Fortuna. Police arrived at the two-story home with a manicured lawn and a wooded backyard to find Adam on the front porch bleeding from four gunshot wounds, and Kellim dead of a single self-inflicted gunshot to the head. Officers found the ex-couple's now 2-year-old daughter buckled safely in the backseat of a Mustang convertible parked in the driveway, and a pair of .380 caliber handguns next to Kellim's body.

The case thrust the issue of domestic violence into the spotlight in Humboldt County, where rates of reported instances of domestic violence are about 25 percent higher than the state average.

According to statistics from the California Department of Justice, there were 768 calls to local police in 2013 (the last year statistics are available) reporting domestic violence, which equates to about 5 calls for every 1,000 county residents. Over the 10-year-period ending in 2013, the county averaged 6 such calls annually per 1,000 residents. Statewide, the average over that same period is about 4 calls per 1,000 residents. A study by the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation found that one in four women have experienced "severe physical violence" at the hands of an intimate partner at some point in their lives.

The national statistics are also chilling. In 2009, 35 percent of all female murder victims were killed by an intimate partner, according to a report by the Federal Bureau of Investigations. A report by the Bureau of Justice found that, on average, three women are killed every day in the United States by a current or former intimate partner and that, in 2009, 26 percent of violent crimes against women were carried out by a current or former spouse, boyfriend or girlfriend.

The impacts of the national domestic violence epidemic are broad, according to a study by the National Network to End Domestic Violence, which found that intimate partner violence costs the nation more than $5.8 billion annually, including $4.1 billion in health-care costs alone. The survey also found that U.S. employers as a whole lose about $13 billion annually to domestic violence due to absences and lost productivity and that as many as 57 percent of homeless women cited domestic violence as the reason they wound up on the streets.

Locally, domestic violence is such a problem that newly seated District Attorney Maggie Fleming made it the cornerstone of her campaign and, less than three months after taking office, her short-staffed office announced the hire of an investigator devoted solely to working such cases. An analysis of county jail booking records by Lost Coast Outpost Editor Hank Sims found that 7 percent of the county's arrests in 2013 were on suspicion of domestic violence and related charges.

And that's just what gets reported. Nationally, three out of four intimate partner assaults are never mentioned to police, according to a 2001 report by the National Institute of Justice.

Advocates maintain that most instances of domestic violence never come to the attention of police. Domestic violence is about power and control, they say, and perpetrators often use coercion, emotional abuse, intimidation, isolation and economic pressure to keep victims quiet.

Fortuna Police Chief Bill Dobberstein said investigators are still working to determine exactly what preceded the March 18 shootings, but likely won't have any real clarity until they can interview Adam, who — as of March 24 — was in stable condition at the UC Davis Medical Center, with two bullets still lodged in her body. Dobberstein said he spoke with Adam on March 23, but that the department won't formally interview her until she returns home.

So far, police have determined that Adam strapped her daughter into her car shortly before 6 a.m. on March 18 and headed to the gate of her Fortuna community, where she and Kellim had arranged for him to pick up the girl. The two had a shared custody arrangement in which each spent about half the week with their daughter. While court documents list the College of the Redwoods parking lot as the designated meeting area for the custody handoffs, Dobberstein said he believes they regularly met outside the gate near Adam's home.

Dobberstein said police found Kellim's car parked outside the gate, and believe he rode in Adam's Mustang back to her house, but it's unclear why. The chief said Adam's husband of 15 years, who was home at the time of the shooting, told police he heard a loud dispute on the doorstep of his and Adam's house shortly before 6 a.m., followed by a pair of gunshots, a brief pause, and two more. The husband then called 911. A last single gunshot rang out while he was talking to dispatch.

It appears only one of the handguns found near Kellim's body was fired, Dobberstein said, adding that police believe he shot Adam twice from about two feet away, waited a moment, then shot her twice more. After a longer pause, Dobberstein said, Kellim put the gun to his head and fired the final shot. It remains unclear if the two semi-automatic handguns found at the scene were those referenced in the restraining order paperwork and if they were legally registered to Kellim, Dobberstein said. The chief also said investigators haven't found a suicide note or anything indicating whether the shootings were premeditated.

Two years after it was written, a note attached to Adam's request for a restraining order in 2013 contains a chilling passage, scrawled in her looping mix of cursive and print. She wrote, "(Kellim) has verbally threatened my life by saying that if he ever killed his family he would kill himself as well." ●

Stabbing Prompts Knife Sale

Ever want to flex like Conan and swing a 3-foot blade? Or maybe just Ninja around with a samurai sword of your own? Perhaps you're a hunter, who needs a good sheathable blade? If so, you're in luck.

Schatzi's Hidden Treasures — a locally owned shop in the Bayshore Mall that sells everything from Nag Champa incense and "functional glassware" to festival attire and crystals — has been asked by mall management to get rid of all its axes, swords and long blades and has consequently launched an everything-must-go, 50-percent-off sale. The request came on the heels of a pair of scary incidents at the mall in February.

Bayshore Mall General Manager Kirk White said that Schatzi's lease agreement with the mall doesn't allow the store to sell long blades. But Kirk conceded that mall management didn't take any action to prevent the store from doing so until after a female employee of a mall store was stabbed on Feb. 22 and then, three days later, a man brandished a handgun at mall security when asked to leave Walmart.

"Given the recent incidents, I had to remind them," White said. "But they've never been allowed to sell those knives."

Tony Raimondi, who works at Schatzi's and handles the store's social media accounts, said the current sale will last until April 1, when the store has to be rid of all long blades. But, Raimondi said, Schatzi's will continue to carry utility knives and other folding blades, which apparently aren't in violation of its lease agreement. Raimondi said the whole situation seems a bit crazy, as the smaller blades are actually more likely to be used for violent purposes.

The issue is bubbling up at a time when public perception is that unsavory behavior at the mall is steadily increasing. Eureka police Capt. Steve Watson said his department has been in close contact with mall security, which has reported a sense that there have been some "increased issues." Watson stressed that he doesn't think the mall is unsafe for patrons, but said mall staff and others have expressed concerns about the proliferation of shoplifting and some perceived safety issues.

"We're working on some strategies with the mall to help them address some of their concerns," he said. "There's been a proactive, two-way communication between the mall and EPD."

Watson declined to go into much detail about what those strategies entail, other than to say EPD has increased its presence at the mall with officers doing periodic walkthroughs and that the department has also launched investigations targeting some of the "more prolific criminals or criminal predators" known to frequent the areas around the mall.

As to the long blades at Schatzi's, Watson said he had no idea they even existed. And it looks like they won't for much longer.

COURTS

Sentence in Pot Farm Slaying

A Humboldt County Superior Court judge on March 23 sentenced Limmie Greg Curry III, 24, to serve 12 years in prison for the 2010 killing of William "Billie" Reed on a remote property off State Route 299, east of Blue Lake.

On the eve of a second murder trial in the case, Curry pleaded guilty to a charge of voluntary manslaughter. The 12-year sentence was the maximum allowable under the law, and included a one-year firearm enhancement. But Curry has been in custody since shortly after the February 2010 killing, and consequently has only about five years remaining on his sentence to serve in state prison (with good conduct, he'll only serve 85 percent of his sentence).

Prosecutors alleged that Curry and another man, Eddie Lee, shot and killed Reed on Feb. 3, 2010 before burning and hiding his remains in an effort to take over Reed's home, belongings and a marijuana growing operation on the property. Officials ultimately found Reed's charred skeletal remains in several burial sites on the property, including one in a garden site where Reed had allegedly grown marijuana the year previous summer. Curry and Lee were arrested shortly after the killing, but were tried separately on murder charges.

During Curry's first trial, which was prosecuted by former District Attorney Paul Gallegos, his defense attorney argued that it was Lee who killed Reed and spent thousands of dollars of the dead man's money in the following days, ultimately hosting a Super Bowl party at Reed's house about a week later. The jury deadlocked in the case, 7-5 in favor of acquittal, with jurors saying they found key witnesses in the case — specifically Lee and Curry's girlfriends — to be untrustworthy and that the prosecution had been ineffective.

Lee's case then went to trial last fall, and his defense pointed the finger at Curry, saying that he'd killed Reed — Lee's good friend — in an effort to "come up" and take over his life, then threatened Lee to keep quiet. Shortly before the case was to go to the jury, Lee's attorney — Darryl Stallworth — took the rare step of making a motion to dismiss the case, arguing that Gallegos had failed to present enough evidence to even warrant jury deliberations in the case. Judge John Feeney agreed.

In an interview with the Times-Standard, Deputy District Attorney Kelly Neel referred to Curry's plea deal as a "compromise," but indicated it was necessary because a witness had destroyed evidence in the case and prosecutors were unable to locate Lee's former girlfriend — Moriah Foster — who had previously testified that Curry admitted to her that he'd killed Reed.

EMERGENCY

Eureka Man Killed in 101 Crash

The Humboldt County Coroner's Office has identified the man killed in a car crash on U.S. Highway 101 in Arcata on Saturday, March 21 as 30-year-old Mitchell Eldon Ford, of Eureka.

According to the California Highway Patrol, Ford was driving south at about 6:30 a.m. when, for unknown reasons, he lost control of his 1989 Chevrolet and crashed through the center divider and its guardrails, coming to rest in the north-bound lanes of Highway 101. Ford escaped major injury in the crash, and was standing near his car, according to CHP, when a northbound 2000 Toyota driven by Crystal Marie Sanders, of Fortuna, crashed into him and his car.

Ford was transported to Mad River Community Hospital, where he was pronounced dead. Sanders received minor injuries in the crash, the cause of which remains under investigation.

CRIME / GOVERNMENT

Sheriff's Office, Grand Jury Butt Heads

Policies at the Humboldt County jail continue to come under fire from the grand jury, which reported this week that jail staff refuses to inform prisoners being released that they have the right to ask for transportation if they were arrested farther than 25 miles from the jail.

In its report, the grand jury says Sheriff Mike Downey believes that correctional officers are not legally required to inform prisoners of their right to transportation assistance upon release, and that the policy will not change.

The grand jury doesn't approve:

"Our own findings would conclude that the Sheriff's policies and the Humboldt County Correctional Officers' actions are evading their responsibilities to the qualified inmates and that it might not technically be considered 'breaking the law,' but that a 'normal person' would conclude that the Sheriff was not acting in good faith by evading the issue and not informing those who qualify of their legal rights."

The sheriff responded in a press release, saying that since January he's asked correctional officers to give public transportation passes to indigent people arrested in Southern and Eastern Humboldt — but that those arrestees have to ask for them.

Light up and Move along

Arcata updated its public loitering smoking ordinance on March 18, but don't get too attached to the new rules — the now city-wide public ban is likely to evolve again in the coming months.

Residents along the border of the current prohibition area (J Street, in particular, at Eighth and Ninth streets) have complained that the previous ban drove herds of loitering layabouts to the sidewalks and streets of their neighborhood, bringing with them smoking, drinking, trash, general rude behavior and occasionally more serious problems, like fights.

In an effort to combat the unintended gatherings brought about by the ban, the city council voted to enact a city-wide ban of smoking on public streets and sidewalks. That is, unless, you're walking.

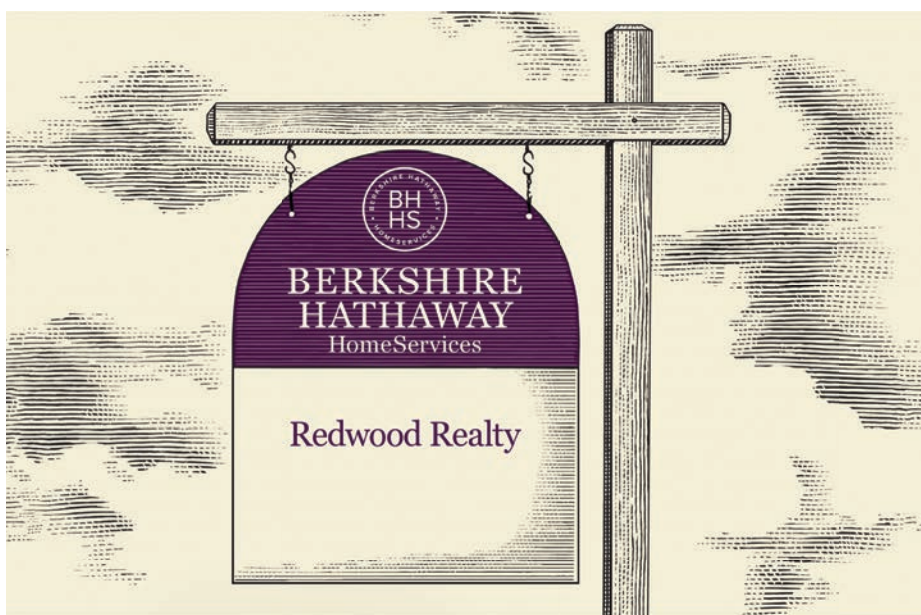

Per the ordinance (emphasis ours):

Smoking shall be prohibited on any public street, sidewalk, parking lot or any other property owned or leased by the City, or in which the City holds a right of way easement, and which is open to members of the general public, except while actively passing through on the way to another destination.

That keep-on-movin' clause doesn't apply to the plaza area (including the sidewalks in front of bars and shops opposite the plaza) or the bus station, where smoking remains outright criminal.

But! The council suggested this was a stop-gap measure to address the mingling concerns of J Street neighborhood residents (it will go into effect in April), and has asked city staff, including the police chief, to research designated smoking areas and "time of use restrictions" — meaning looser prohibitions at night.

Drained Dry

By Grant Scott-Goforth

A study published last week posits a parched forecast for several North Coast watersheds that host concentrated marijuana cultivation sites.

The report, co-written by scientists from the California Department of Fish and Wildlife and the National Marine Fisheries Service, outlines the stream-sucking impacts of grows in the areas of Upper Redwood Creek, Salmon Creek and Redwood Creek South, located in Humboldt County, and Mendocino County's Outlet Creek.

Using satellite imagery, stream flow data and anecdotal evidence gathered by tagging along during raids, the team determined that in three out of the four watersheds, "water demands for marijuana cultivation exceed streamflow during low-flow periods."

In other words, the researchers predict that during summertime — when growing marijuana plants require the most water and rainfall all but ceases — many stream beds will dry up.

This won't come as much of a surprise to anyone who's seen maps like the ones environmental biologist Scott Bauer (who co-authored the study for Fish and Wildlife) has produced, showing clusters of grows on tributaries of many North Coast rivers.

And while research areas contain tens of thousands of marijuana plants, "the total number of registered, active diversions on file with the State Water Resources Control Board accounted less than half of the number of parcels with [grows] that were visible from aerial imagery," the study reads. "In some watersheds, the number was as low as 6 percent."

The research indicates that relatively small, private-land grows have proliferated in the last two decades. Most of those rely on surface water to irrigate crops, meaning big draws on streams from many users. That adds up, the research shows, and it can have devastating effects.

"Flow modification is one of the greatest threats to aquatic biodiversity," the report reads. But before now, most research on the impacts of dewatering watersheds has been limited to large-scale projects like hydroelectric dams.

The focus areas of the Fish and Wildlife study are rich in fragile species, including the coho and Chinook salmon and steelhead trout, each of which are considered threatened by the federal and/or state government.

Even for the larger streams that aren't anticipated to run completely dry, lower flows are correlated with rising temperatures, which hinder salmon's ability to reproduce and survive. "Given the specter of climate change-induced ... droughts and diminished summer stream flows in the region, continued diversions at a rate necessary to support the current scale of marijuana cultivation in Northern California could be catastrophic for aquatic species," the report reads.

Fish, amphibians and other water-reliant wildlife aren't the researchers' only concern either. "On a localized scale, with regional implications, this study detects an emerging threat to not only aquatic biodiversity but also human water security, since surface water supplies most of the water for domestic uses in watersheds throughout Northwestern California."

One can imagine a farmer, surprised by a usually reliant stream's mid-season shrinkage, taking matters into his or her own hands and stalking up a creek bed with bolt cutters, lopping every upstream water pipe along the way.

Bauer and his co-authors call for more research of streamflow impacts, more enforcement of illegal diversions, more education of best practices for growers, and careful attention to land use policies for local and state legislators.

After all, pot is for smoking; water's for fighting.

Can Humboldt afford to fly?

Story and photos by Grant Scott-Goforth

On an early February afternoon, 4th District Supervisor Virginia Bass found herself in a huge Denver convention hall filled with more than 100 tables. Sitting at each: potential matches. It was like speed dating, and she was prepared, despite the pressure of a giant clock ticking away the seconds of each timed interaction.

Would Bass find the perfect fit out of the dozens of attendees? The answer remains unclear. She wasn't looking for romance, but instead courting representatives from airlines, looking to impress them with Humboldt County's riches and charm.

Bass's whirlwind wooing tour was only the latest in a years-long effort to increase options for Humboldt's would-be flyers. It's been successful on many fronts. Fly Humboldt, the public-private partnership organized to add flight routes into and out of the Arcata-Eureka Airport, has raised more than $1 million to lure airlines to serve the county. But the results of that fundraising and cheerleading have been ... well, it's hard to say. Bass, and her cohorts in the airplane recruitment faction are playing close to the vest. The airline industry has changed a lot in recent years, and companies hold the cards in an extremely competitive market. Any press could wildly swing Humboldt's chances of attracting more air service, insiders say.

Meanwhile, the Aviation Division's enterprise fund, essentially the airports' operating budget, is projected to be nearly $1 million in the hole by the middle of this year. The division is borrowing from its trusts to cover costs, and considering asking for a loan from the county's general fund — a move that would take money away from other county services. The deficit is a result of fewer planes and fewer passengers, officials say. More destinations will turn that around, they insist. But when? And who will benefit? Can the county really afford a commercial airport, or, more importantly, should it?

Many people forget

there are six airports operated by Humboldt County's Aviation Division. That includes small "general aviation" airports, which serve private flyers and shipping companies in Dinsmore, Garberville, Kneeland, Rohnerville and on Humboldt Bay, just north of Eureka. The only commercial airport is the Arcata-Eureka Airport on the north end of unincorporated McKinleyville. (County supervisors voted to change the airport's name to the "California Redwood Coast — Humboldt County Airport" two years ago, but they're still waiting on final Federal Aviation Administration approval before they'll officially start calling it that.)

County Public Works Director Tom

Mattson is, by default, the interim Airport Manager, since former manager Jacquelyn Hulsey resigned in 2013. Hulsey's position has been frozen since then — a move that allowed the county to continue to employ Aviation Division Program Manager Emily Jacobs, who's been instrumental in the effort to expand service to ACV.

Each of Humboldt's tiny airports requires employees and regular maintenance to keep them up to safety standards, but Eureka-Arcata is by far the costliest line in the Aviation Department budget. That wasn't much of a problem in the early 2000s. The arrivals and departures of multiple airplanes brought in revenues from fuel sales, landing fees and terminal and hangar rentals that covered the county's operating costs. In the 2004-2005 fiscal year budget report to the board of supervisors, the director of public works wrote that "the operations of the county airport system are 100 percent funded by revenues collected at the airports."

At that point, local flyers could get on a plane to San Francisco, Seattle or Los Angeles through Horizon Air or United Airlines. From 2005 to 2009, more than 100,000 passengers (some of them repeat flyers, no doubt) got on planes each year in Humboldt County, bound for those

West Coast hubs and beyond.

With air travel buzzing, the Aviation Division announced in 2008 it had worked out a deal with Delta Airlines to connect ACV to Salt Lake City, Utah. In exchange for service, the county offered Delta $1 million in incentives and a $500,000 minimum revenue guarantee. Financed by the Headwaters Fund, it was an insurance of sorts: If Delta's business plan didn't work out, the county would eat the loss.

Two years later, that's exactly what happened. In 2010, Delta pulled its Salt Lake City route. Horizon had ended its Seattle route in 2009, and in 2011 dropped its Los Angeles flights. That left Humboldt County flyers with one option: United Air to San Francisco.

It's arguably Humboldt County's most important hub, but the lack of options seems to have discouraged flyers. Enplanements have been falling since 2009, with just 53,000 people boarding planes out of Humboldt County in 2014.

Jacobs says that reduced service has led people to drive out of the area to catch flights, increasing enplanements at the Santa Rosa airport (which went up 6 percent between 2012 and 2013) and Medford, Oregon (which actually saw a 2 percent decrease in enplanements during the same time period).

UNITED AIRLINES IS THE SOLE COMMERCIAL OPERATOR AT ACV.

It's a chicken-egg problem, she says. "When our community goes to other airports, all they're doing is boosting that airport. More flights and more destinations? We really don't get that until more people fly out [of ACV]."

There's less air service, certainly. But the dwindling number of flyers has to do with perception as well, Jacobs says, adding that misconceptions continue to swirl about the quality and reliability of ACV's air service.

Back-to-back runway improvement projects at ACV and San Francisco over the last several years led to cancellations and delays, which frustrated community members. Those projects are finished now, but the perception that ACV is unreliable — stemming from a 50 percent on-time arrival rate in 2008 — persists. But delays have gone down steadily in recent years; 76 percent arrived on time in 2014, and ACV beat the national average for on-time arrivals in January, 2015.

Another perception that plagues ACV is that fares are rising, and it's very real. The average cost of a one-way ticket out of ACV has more than doubled since 2005, from $129 to $275 in 2013, according to data provided by Jacobs. Part of that is due to rising fuel costs and the financial downturn of 2008, but it's hard to imagine that having an additional airline company serving the community wouldn't create some more competitive pricing.

Much of Jacobs' work consists of going out into the community — to schools, organizations, businesses — to tout the reliability of ACV, pitching for people to utilize the local airport and show airlines that the demand and need for additional destinations exist.

Another major part of her job is selling Humboldt County — hard.

Attracting airlines has become an ultra-competitive sport.

Bass didn't show up in Denver to pitch Humboldt County by herself. She described her role as that of a cheerleader — the smiling face of Humboldt County — but Jacobs was also there, bringing the down-to-business edge necessary to win over airlines.

"It's very important to show airlines love," Jacobs said. "Especially the ones we already have." She hinted that Delta's departure after two years of Salt Lake City service may have been the result of less-than-goodwill from the community.

AVIATION DIVISION PROGRAM MANAGER EMILY JACOBS ACTS AS THE DIVISION'S REPRESENTATIVE IN THE ONGOING SEARCH FOR ADDITIONAL AIR SERVICE IN HUMBOLDT COUNTY.

A Decade of Trends at ACV

Wing and a Prayer

Jacobs has been trying to rebuild that goodwill, but she also brings her networking and data to those conferences: facts and figures from previous routes out of ACV, the knowledge of airport improvements, and the feasibility of a host of incentives that can be bargained with, depending on the desirability of a route the airline might offer.

"It's a shark tank," Jacobs said. "You go very polished, you know your stuff."

As Jacobs describes it, airline companies have been losing money since the U.S. deregulated them in the late 1970s. The now-defunct regulatory agency had essentially been taken over by the industry, leading to very high fares. In 1978, "Federal controls over the entry and exit of airlines, flight schedules, airfares and quality of service were abolished," according to an article by The Public Good Initiative director David Morris. "Financial oversight was abandoned. Only airline safety remained under federal regulation."

Combined with dropping oil prices and newfound competition, fares plummeted, the standard thinking goes, democratizing air travel throughout the country. Deregulation was lauded across the political spectrum. According to Morris, the act's success goes virtually uncontested.

But, Morris writes (and he cites several studies), the drop in fare prices more or less coincided with falling prices before deregulation. Essentially, Morris says, deregulation led to concentration of ownership of airline companies, and one analyst concluded that the "grant of pricing freedom to the airline industry has generally resulted in average prices being higher than they would have been had regulation continued."

That thinking is becoming slightly broader, but economic debate aside, one thing is indisputable: Humboldt County has few options for air service. Four airline companies control 85 percent of U.S. air travel: Delta, United, American and Alaskan (which owns Horizon). And it's those same big four that Fly

PRESS WERE INVITED TO CELEBRATE UNITED AIRLINES' NEW PLANES. "IT'S VERY IMPORTANT TO SHOW AIRLINES LOVE," JACOBS SAID.

Humboldt and the county have pinned their hopes on.

But so has everyone else. Jacobs says there are hundreds of small communities around the country trying to expand air service, many of them with bigger populations (ergo more potential customers) than Humboldt County. Chico, Ventura, Redding and Oxnard — each of which has more than 80,000 residents, not including the surrounding areas — are all trying to expand service, just in California.

"We are so fortunate to have air service at all right now," Bass says.

So airlines, by design or by circumstance, have pitted America's small cities against each other. That means in addition to "showing the love," communities are offering hefty subsidies to airlines.

Jacobs paints a piteous portrait of the airline companies, saying they hadn't turned profits since deregulation, and that the price-wars model of the early 2000s didn't work. Low cost carriers like Southwest came in with older planes and tried to offer as many seats as possible. The legacy carriers couldn't compete, so the big four changed. No doubt, customers used to paying competition-lowered fares are bothered by the recent rise in prices, but they must pay the real cost of flying, Jacobs says.

It seems to be paying off. The airline industry posted record profits of $19.7 billion in 2014, up 50 percent from the year before, according to the Economist. The companies' biggest cost is jet fuel, and they operate on a fairly small margin, so much of their success depends on year-to-year fluctuations in oil prices.

But airlines are getting a lot more than just rising fares. It's now essential, everyone agrees, to offer a minimum revenue guarantee for an airline to even consider new service to an area.

Small planes aren't profitable like the big jets that fly out of San Francisco and New York, Jacobs says. Airline companies operate on small margins and an economy of scale. One industry association estimates that airlines profit about $6 per passenger, per flight. So when airlines offer regional service, like out of ACV, they're most often trying to get those people onto a connecting flight, where the profit margins are higher.

"They're not subsidized to have empty seats," Jacobs says. "They want a body in that seat that's connecting onto somewhere else."

A minimum revenue guarantee, or MRG, "ensures the airline that there's a huge commitment in making [a new route] successful," she says.

Gregg Foster, a banker who's worked on securing airline service since his time as the Redwood Region Economic Development Commission in the mid 2000s, said American Airlines came knocking in 2012. Foster (who's now married to Jacobs) had been flown to a meeting with the company in Tampa. "They were ready to sign a contract," Foster says, but it was too soon. The company wanted a $2 million revenue guarantee. "There just wasn't community commitment at the time. American felt burned. They tipped their hand to their competitors. We would have had twice-daily jet service to L.A. in fall 2012 or winter 2013."

That's when Fly Humboldt took off. The organization of public and private partners saw a need to have cash ready so ACV wouldn't get turned down again if an airline felt the timing was right.

The group began fundraising and putting money into a Humboldt Area Foundation-managed bank account. The group raised enough to earn a matching $125,000 Headwaters Fund grant, but donations had stalled again by 2014. Headwaters offered an additional $125,000 grant and Virginia Bass got involved late last year. "We started — I don't want to say pressuring — we started reaching out to people," Bass says.

In January, Fly Humboldt announced it had reached its $1 million goal. Many donations were under $1,000, but, in addition to the headwaters grants, notable donations included $320,000 from the Humboldt County Convention and Visitors Bureau, $80,000 from the city of Arcata, $80,000 from the Humboldt Lodging Alliance, $15,000 from Humboldt State

People felt burned when Delta left, Bass says, "The agreement wasn't negotiated where it protected the county enough."

Jacobs says the county learned from a couple of problems with the Delta contract. With future contracts, the county will seek to reconcile its minimum revenue guarantee on a monthly or quarterly basis, rather than at the very end of a contract, "so you can tell how fast you're going through that money," Jacobs says.

More frequent reconciliations give the county a little more negotiating power over fare prices. Delta's flights to Salt Lake City were pretty full, she says, but the airline wasn't meeting its revenue goals because fares to East Coast destinations were low — around $300.

"The other thing is ancillary costs," Jacobs says — baggage fees, on board meals and other items the airline charges passengers. "Those were not included in the revenue for those flights. Had that been included we would've been less likely to pay that money."

Bass has confidence in Jacobs to negotiate a beneficial contract. "It's not just a blank check when we structure it right," she says.

Foster says American is "talking to us again," but says it's an example of how cautious airlines are about community perception, press and their competitors.

Jacobs says it's hard for her to return from meetings with airlines and stay tight-lipped. She won't talk about the specifics of any current contract negotiations — including which airlines she's talking with. Neither will Bass, except to say she was feeling "jazzed" after the last conference.

But even though the county has money to offer airlines, a minimum revenue guarantee is no service guarantee. Pretty much every community serious about adding service has a million dollars to offer now, Jacobs says. That's in addition to Humboldt's policy of waiving terminal rent and landing fees for two years to incoming airlines.

"Unfortunately, our history is that we haven't treated our airlines very well," Foster says. "Generally, small airports need airlines more than they need us. Treat them well with basic customer service and they appreciate it. In a time [of] lots of pressure on margins, don't start raising fees. We'll make money on parking, ancillary fees."

With a deficit in the Aviation Division projected to reach nearly $1 million by the end of the 2014-2015 fiscal year, can the county really afford to waive fees to entice airlines?

In 2004, the division's operating costs were fully covered by revenue. But by the 2012-2013 fiscal year, Public Works was bemoaning dwindling returns. "As a result of Delta Airlines ceasing air service from the Arcata-Eureka Airport in 2011, enplanements have decreased by 10 percent, thereby decreasing landing fees, parking and rental car revenues," a budget proposal read. Homeland Security funding to assist a sheriff's deputy position at the airport also declined.

Currently, six Aviation Division positions (including that of the airport manager) are frozen in an attempt to manage the budget. In an email, Public Works Director Tom Mattson wrote, "The operational budget has been hit hard by three main items starting with the loss of Delta flights to Salt Lake City then the loss of Horizon flights to Los Angeles and most recently the reduction in fuel sales to the Coast Guard as they have constructed their own fuel tank. ... We have trimmed the expenses to minimal levels."

Public works suggests that additional air service will balance the budget, but the Aviation Department is still operating at a large deficit. Mattson says the loss of a secondary airline has cost the county $250,000 per year — but that's only a quarter of the deficit projected for the end of this fiscal year.

"The simplest answer is to bring in other destinations," says Bass. But asked if additional destinations would make enough revenue to cover the deficit, she says, "I hesitate to make a guess."

United service brings in about $252,000 per year to the Aviation Division. The revenue from additional service would fluctuate depending on the size of planes and the frequency of flights, but Mattson says a quarter-million in additional revenue is a good benchmark.

That won't be an immediate injection

JUST OVER 50,000 PEOPLE FLEW OUT OF ACV IN 2013, ONLY 40 PERCENT OF THE PASSENGERS THAT FLEW IN 2005, WHEN FLYERS HAD SEVERAL AIRLINES TO CHOOSE FROM.

residents, and what their ages, incomes and reasons for flying are.

Did nearly 40 percent of Humboldt County's population fly out of ACV last year? Or were the more than 50,000 passengers frequent flyers? It's unclear.

"There were a lot of opportunities for research we didn't take advantage of," Bass says, when asked about the demographics of Humboldt County residents who use the airport regularly.

The Humboldt County Convention and Visitors Bureau — the largest donor to Fly Humboldt's MRG fund — did not return calls seeking comment before deadline.

It's unclear how long it will take to secure additional air service — if an airline company succumbs to Humboldt's lures at all. Most people agree L.A. is a preferred destination, but those involved in negotiations with airlines won't talk specifics.

As for the Aviation Division, Bass says there's talk about restructuring as a means of ending the deficit, though it's unclear exactly how that would help. She's trying to get more information on how other communities operate their airports.

One idea is handing operations over to a new special district, like the harbor district. That could fund airline subsidies and airport operations through voter-approved property assessments, for example — putting the brunt of public flying costs onto those more likely to utilize the service.

And while most of the energy is being spent on the airline industry's big four, Bass and Jacobs are not discounting other ways to add more destinations, like chartering planes or looking to small airline startups.

They'll continue to sell Humboldt's advantages to airline companies. They've learned from previous mistakes, they say, and have the basic funding they need to seduce airlines.

If a route's successful, Fly Humboldt won't have to touch its pledged $1 million revenue guarantee. That money can be put toward more destinations, marketing the airport to tourists, or encouraging travel by subsidizing low-cost flights in the off-season.

There's a conference in Seattle this June. Bass hopes she'll be invited along for another speed-dating session. Fly Humboldt's successful fundraising left her enthusiastic, but she's anxious to stop the Aviation Division's budgetary bleeding, to ink a deal with an airline and to announce a victory. ● of cash due to two-year fee waivers offered to attract airlines, but Mattson says more routes would increase parking and rental car income, as well.

Still, the division, which began this fiscal year with a $525,000 deficit, is projecting a further loss of $428,000. Some of that, according to a budget report, is due to a one-time, $145,000 tree trimming project to bring ACV into FAA compliance. That leaves the yearly deficit at around $283,000 — greater than the amount the Aviation Division anticipates gaining in additional airline revenue. The Aviation Division's enterprise fund is projected to have an ongoing annual structural deficit of more than $700,000 for the next five years.

The division is borrowing from trust funds it manages to cover costs, but anticipates seeking a loan from the county's general fund as the gap continues to widen.

"We are working to try to keep the deficit from growing, but it will grow this year," Mattson wrote in an email. "In addition to recruiting for additional air service, we are looking at trying to increase revenue from our land base by leasing additional properties and looking hard at our unreimbursed mandated security costs and how those can be reduced."

If the airport's revenues don't increase, Humboldt County taxpayers will be spending a lot of money to subsidize air service. Donations for an MRG are costs that the businesses who donated to Fly Humboldt may see returned in the form of more convenient air travel and competitive fares. But what about the average Humboldt County resident?

That's an area that's sorely lacking in hard data. While the Aviation Division gladly shows records of how many people board and disembark from planes at ACV, it's unclear how many of those people are repeat flyers, how many are county

FIVE THINGS TO KNOW

Before You Ditch Your Job to Follow Your Dream

By Jennifer Savage

1 You need to eat. Seriously. Being able to buy groceries and pay your bills and take the occasional trip to the city is its own kind of bliss. Don't underestimate the toll financial insecurity can take on your happiness. Then again, if you're stuck in a dead-end, low-paying job, you might not have much to lose. (If your passion-following is sponsored by some true believer in your life, skip ahead.)

2. Examine your impulse. If this thing you want to do has kept a grip on you since you were a child being scolded for fantasizing out the window instead of filling in the bubbles on your test sheet, that's a good sign. If a profound personal experience triggered an epiphany, awakened a passion you didn't know you had, that's pretty sweet, too. If you had some drinks and then watched Magic Mike and suddenly think you need to be a male stripper, you might want to revisit that. Do nothing simply because it looks like amazing fun on TV.

3. Start small. If possible, find ways to explore this potential new path before launching down it. Consider yourself an artist? Paint on the weekends until you have enough for a show, then get a show. Want to be a writer? Look into freelancing or submitting short stories. Ready to trade in waitressing for nursing? Volunteer in the hospital for a few months. Dreaming of being a filmmaker? Take classes to hone your skills. Point is, make sure the dream you have reflects the reality of what you're getting yourself into.

4. Are you okay with failing? Because you need to be okay with failing. No matter how much you love something, no matter how hard you work, no matter what a good person you are, no guarantee exists. In fact, you almost certainly will fail — but if you love enough and work enough and are savvy enough, those failures will be opportunities to do better next time. Imagine the worst that can happen. Your art goes unsold. Your writing, unappreciated. Your restaurant sits empty. Your accounting skills fail to inspire applause. Your nonprofit receives no donations. Your blog never attracts more than four readers, one of whom is your mom and another of whom is your brother. The world already has a ton of graphic designers, you come to realize, and needs another folk singer like you need a hole in your head. What will you do when this realization hits?

5. Are you okay with success? Because sometimes that happens. And then what will you do with all the adoration and money and opportunities that come your way? Turn into an entitled jerkface? Break hearts and squander the fortune life has brought you? Or remember that luck always, always plays a role and therefore you should not only stay smart and humble, but also look for ways to help others thrive at their particular passions.

BONUS: It's okay to like working for someone else. It's okay to revel in security. You might have hobbies instead of hangers. But always be striving. Learning new things, improving on established knowledge, letting yourself aim high, letting go of what isn't working — all this makes life, and a person, more interesting. ●

you might want

Working lunches that work

Story and photos
by Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

Not every business lunch calls for the classic steak and Martinis, and not all of us can return to work after that sort of thing. Choosing where to break bread and make deals can be high pressure. Don't sweat it — you'll ruin your suit. (Kid-ding, Humboldt. Work hoodie.)

Duck, Duck, Bacon

The duck B.L.T.A. at Plaza Grill (780 Seventh St., Arcata) says, "I'm refined but down-to-earth," and, "I'm not broke/ desperate, but I won't spend your money like a Kardashian with a Champagne buzz, either" ($13). It's not duck bacon exactly, but smoked duck in thick, hammy slices on soft, toasty sourdough with avocado, lettuce, tomato, caramelized onions and garlic aioli. It's smoky and not a bit dry — everything you love about an old-fashioned BLT plus the luxurious gaminess of duck, which is kind of having a moment right now. And if your lunch partner wisely swaps in the sweet potato fries, keep it professional and don't pick off his or her plate.

Bavarians at the Gate

Ever sit at your desk with a rumbling stomach, wishing your office had sandwich delivery like in old movies? Or that some kind of lunch fairy would bring you food? Turns out that is a thing that can happen, but with a twist. Well, a lot of twists. As in pretzels. No, not the gangly ropes of dry bread you gnaw at a ballgame. These are plump knots of soft, warm dough that stretch apart in a way that reminds you why you haven't given up gluten. Get an order of 10 or so together and Royal Bavarian Brezen (476-3920) will show up in the form of Alexandra Hierhager, the lederhosen-clad, basket-wielding woman who wakes at 4 a.m. to bake her mother's recipe from (surprise) Bavaria — a magical land of mellifluous German and bountiful pastries.

The basic salt pretzel ($3.50) satisfies like a bagel, but the varieties are legion. The basket overflows (that woman is stronger than she looks) with savory and sweet options from jalapeño to chocolate and peanut butter ($4.50 or three for $10). Both the tomato, mozzarella and basil pretzel and the spinach, feta and Monterey jack one are generously topped and as satisfying as sandwiches. The apple strudel pretzel is full of cinnamon and fruit, but with a bagel's chewiness and vanilla frosting. Eating a pretzel lunch is the team-building exercise your office has been waiting for.

Power Lunch

The walk from the front door to the In-gomar Club's restaurant (143 M St., Eureka) is a crash course in Victorian architecture with its alabaster fireplaces and dizzying woodwork. "At one time, they say every important decision was made around the table," says club member Doug Durham, gesturing toward the card room on the second floor of the Carson Mansion. These days, if you want to dine with the power elite, you'll need to throw down a couple thousand to join the club and pay monthly dues, or get a member to bring you along.

LUNCH IS DUCK SEASON.

A BASKET OF BAVARIAN BOUNTY.

Down in the club's restaurant, Durham pulls out a red velvet chair and recommends the crab sandwich ($22). Take his advice because the man is class — where others might keep a flask, he carries a tiny pepper grinder filled with his particular blend. The sandwich is a hefty scoop of creamy crab salad on sourdough with a side of hand-cut fries. The crab is sweet and fresh with just a little pepper. Of course, everything tastes better with a panoramic view of the bay and those peasants at the marina who are forced to eat, well, crab sandwiches and fries. Whatever. There are roses on the table and a subtly flavored port wine ice cream for dessert ($5). The pale, dusky scoop shows up at exactly the right temperature — on the cusp of melting — so you can fully taste the hint of sweet port and the heavy cream, which has never made you feel so 1 percent.

You Wearing a Wire?

Is your business completely legal? Just asking. Because if you would feel more comfortable having your working lunch somewhere outdoors and, ahem, bug-free, a truck might be the way to go.

Pull up to the Speedy Taco truck in the parking lot of Sport and Cycle (1621 Broadway, Eureka) and line up with the construction workers and cubicle slaves for a couple of the asada tacos ($1.65 each). They're saucy little numbers with chunks of grilled steak, smooth red salsa, green onions and cilantro with lime wedges on the side. You could go with one of the enormous super burritos, but this is a bright, savory, tangy meal that won't slow you down if you have to make a run for it. Before we get into where you can go with your bodies, let's talk about where you can go with your ears. This week marks the debut of a new KMUD program, The Adventurous Ear in which host John Hardin shares unusual, interesting, genre-defying music, and talks to the artists who create it — including Humboldt County's own musical experimenters. The Adventurous Ear airs Thursdays at 5 p.m. on 88.1 FM, beginning this week with the music of Arcata-based improvisational ensemble, Medicine Baul, recorded live at Synapsis in Eureka. So if you, too, produce very odd music, send a CD to The Adventurous Ear/John Hardin c/o KMUD, P. O. Box 135, Redway, CA 95560.

Thursday

Which offers a perfect segue into the Lancaster Trio, comprised of Elizabeth Grunin, a cellist from Sacramento, Nicaulis Alliey, a flutist from Venezuela and Jelena Dukic, a pianist from Florida. The group's upcoming Humboldt State University performance will include "Vox Balaenae" ("Voice of the Whale") by celebrated contemporary American composer George Crumb, who was inspired by the first recordings of humpback whale songs in the late 1960s and requested that all performers of the piece wear masks and be bathed in blue light. Show begins at 8 p.m. in Fulkerson Recital Hall. Tickets are $10 general/$5 seniors, children and students, available from the HSU Box Office or at the door.

In more familiar fashion — although on a less familiar day — DJ Red, Matt n'Adam and Jaymorg & Funky T-Rex bring Soul Night, once again, to Humboldt Brews. Tickets are $5, doors at 9 p.m., 21-and-over.

Friday

Hippies and treehuggers, this one's for you: Moonalice offers a seasoned blend of roots, rock and R&B at the Mateel Community Center in a benefit for EPIC that also is sure to include a multi-sensory experience of lights, visuals, music, art and dance highlighted by extended improvisations in the tradition of the Grateful Dead. Doors open at 6 p.m. for dinner, music starts at 8 p.m. Tickets are $15 in advance, $20 at the door and available at www.brownpapertickets.com, Redway Liquor and Wildberries Marketplace. All ages.

When junk-blues purveyors Hillstomp took a year's hiatus in 2013, fans worried the break would turn into a permanent one. The band allayed fears with the release of Portland, Ore last year — great news for those of us in love with Hillstomp's rambunctious deluge of North-Mississippi-trance-blues-meets-Appalachia-punk-abilly clanging and tumbling. The duo plays Hum Brews at 9:30 p.m., tickets are $12/$15, show is 21-and-over.

From the unfamiliar to a comfortable groove

Saturday

Saturday nights don't get heavier than this. Port Orchard stoner rock heroes Mos Generator join Humboldt's own veteran rockers Lord Ellis at the Alibi. Music starts at 11 p.m., cover is $5, show is 21-and-over.

More local action takes place at the Palm Lounge, with a hip-hop extravaganza featuring The Dirty Rats, Hiway, Nac One and Sinek. Doors at 9:30 p.m., no cover.

Sunday

Laurie Lewis and Kathy Kallick, two of the Bay Area's most admired bluegrass artists, perform the songs of their highly esteemed California predecessors, Vern Williams and Ray Parks, best known for their hard-core traditional bluegrass in the high lonesome style. The show takes place at the Arcata Playhouse at 7 p.m., tickets are $18 general, $15 Playhouse and Humboldt Folklife Members.

Monday

Here's an interesting little show — The Velopheliacs and Minna Stenberg at the Siren's Song. The Velopheliacs' sound is dark and wandering, likely classified under "indie folk," but that seems a bit restrictive for a band so wide-ranging. A "velophile," by the way, is someone with a passion for bicycles and cycling, and the Velopheliacs' eponymous track is ridiculously catchy — preview it on Spotify and be prepared to sing along. Somewhere between little girl and torch singer, Minna Stenberg is a somewhat more traditional take on the chick-with-guitar motif. She also does a nice Mumford & Sons cover. Show starts at 8 p.m., free, all ages.

Wednesday

Look, just cancel whatever you have going on Thursday morning so you can catch the psychedelic-funk-soul wonder known as Monophonics at the Arcata Theatre Lounge. Think early Funkadelic, Sly and The Family Stone, and The Temptations meets The Zombies, The Beatles, Beach Boys and Pink Floyd. Seriously cool. Doors open at 9 p.m. happy hour prices on food and beverage until 10:00 p.m. $15 advance tickets at www.arcatatheater.com, Wildberries, People's Records and The Works. $20 general admission tickets, and the show is 21 and over.

Figure out your derby name (sorry, "Mutha Thump Her" is already taken) and roll out to Redwood Acres Fairgrounds for Humboldt Roller Derby action. On Saturday, March 28 at 6 p.m., The Journal sponsors a double-header against Southern Oregon. That's right. We be jammin' ($15, $12 advance, free for kids 10 and under).

The 25th annual Redwood Coast Music Festival features a Blues Show on Friday, March 27 at the Eureka Theater ($30). Two headlining acts bring the heat: singer/songwriter Dana Fuchs (do yourself a favor and YouTube her cover of Etta James' "I'd Rather Go Blind") and five-time Blues Music Awards winner Curtis Salgado. Show starts at 4:30 p.m.

Humboldt State University Opera Workshop presents Dido and Aeneas at the Gist Theater, March 26 through 29 at 7:30 p.m. with a 2 p.m. Sunday matinee ($10, $5, $3 HSU students).

Dido and Aeneas love each other, but this is Greek tragedy, people. They sing beautiful arias and contend with an evil sorceress. Witches!

Critters and Creepy-crawlies

Willow Creek is known as Bigfoot country. But what other furry critters creep around in Sasquatch's neck of the woods? Physical evidence of snakes, lizards, owls and hawks is a bit easier to find than bipedal impressions, and you've got an opportunity to behold some of those creatures live and in the flesh/feather (as well as captured on print and canvas) at the Willow Creek Wildlife Festival.

On Saturday, March 28 from noon to 4 p.m., Studio 299 Center for the Arts, in conjunction with Creekside Arts and Education, hosts this free, family-friendly event that has a little something for everyone. Kids can "ooh" and "eww!" with Nature Joe and his bird, reptile and creepy-crawly exhibits, while adults peruse the wilds from the cultured safety of the Studio. The gallery show of wildlife art from local artists features photography, drawing, candles and woodworking. You can also chat up the artists and enjoy complementary refreshments during the all-day gallery reception. Lunch is available for purchase, as well.

So grab your cameras and head out to the land of big trees and the Trinity. And keep your eyes peeled for hairy hitchhikers. You never know.

River Dance

There are two kinds of people: Those who dump trash thoughtlessly, and those who come along and clean up after them. To quote a familiar bumper sticker, "We all live downstream." So party with those who respect our local waterways and the species they nourish — being good stewards can be a good time.

The Eel River Clean-up Project hosts an all-day benefit/party at the Mateel Community Center on Saturday, March 28 from 2 p.m. to 1 a.m. featuring music from local favorites on two stages. In addition to a musical line-up that includes Cold Blue Water, Asha Nan, NPK, Samb A More, Berel Alexander, the Funicators and more, there will be kids' crafts and education, a barbecue catered by Smokin' Moses, beer and wine, and a raffle of gifts donated by local businesses.

Do your part to keep Humboldt beautiful and healthy for generations to come. You don't have to spend your weekend picking up discarded fishing line and rusty hooks from the banks of the Eel (although that would be nice!), but you can definitely make a donation, down a beer and shake your booty to Ishi Dube for the cause.

Misfires

Gunman and Insurgent miss their targets

By John J. Bennett

filmland@northcoastjournal.com

Reviews

THE GUNMAN. There have been a number of comparisons made lately of the various late-middle-aged Hollywood actors recently restyled as action stars. This amounts to lumping everyone who makes a shoot 'em up in with the current king of such things, Liam Neeson. Yes, I see it too. And I'll try not to beat that dead horse too much here, beyond saying that Sean Penn has now joined the club, with Neeson's benefactor, Taken director Pierre Morel, behind the camera.

In the Democratic Republic of Congo, circa 2006, Jim Terrier (Penn) is part of a security detail protecting a mining site. He's gotten himself involved with a doctor doing aid work, Annie (Jasmine Trinca), who remains blissfully ignorant as to what he's really doing in the Congo. His liaison to the mining company, Felix (Javier Bardem), jealous of Terrier and Annie's relationship, activates Terrier and his team for an assassination, knowing full well Terrier will subsequently have to leave the continent.

Eight years later, Terrier has returned to the Congo on his own to do humanitarian work and try to atone for the damage his actions have caused. (And to surf, we learn from a completely unnecessary scene which establishes an element of character to which we never return). One day while he's drilling a well, some local bad guys show up to murder him. We all know that's not going to happen, and it comes as no surprise that our protagonist is a proficient practitioner of violence. Now that people are trying to kill him, though, Terrier has to figure out why. He winds up in Spain by way of London, where he reestablishes contact with Felix, Annie and some of his old contractor cronies.

This all adds up to a rather clumsy, belabored pseudo-detective story with a minimal-to-non-existent payoff. It is punctuated by a number of shootouts, at least one explosion and a disproportionate volume of expository dialogue. Which is really a shame, because The Gunman squanders a solid cast and a decent premise. Penn is possessed of an undeniable gravity and screen presence, but he seems wildly out of place in this context. Morel and the screenwriters fail to infuse the story with the seriousness it and Penn's performance need to establish any resonance. There are glimpses of something grittier and better, which makes the end result all the more frustrating. For example: Terrier suffers from a brain injury that affects his memory and balance. Instead of digging in to what this condition might really mean, or offering any genuine consequences, it just becomes a convenient plot device intended to heighten tension. In fact, more import is given to scenes wherein he can showcase his impressively sculpted torso. Then there's the Felix character, an alcoholic mess of jealousy and regret whose story Bardem barely gets to tell. Even the setting, which allows the climax to take place at a bull fight, feels indulgent and miscalculated.

The biggest disappointment here is that The Gunman fails to excite or to provoke. It's packed with violence, some of it almost compelling, and the story is ostensibly about corporate manipulation and disregard for human life, but it's ultimately pretty dull and predictable. R. 115m.

DIVERGENT SERIES: INSURGENT. I didn't particularly care for Divergent, part one of this second-tier, would-be cash factory, and I admit that I don't remember much of it. Off the job, a lapse like this could be attributed to my own habits. But in this case, Divergent, like Insurgent, just isn't that interesting.

Part two picks up pretty shortly after the ending of the first installment, with

SPICOLI STILL LOVES SOME TASTY WAVES.

Tris Prior (Shailene Woodley), her par amour Four (Theo James), her brother Caleb (Ansel Elgort) and her foil Peter (Miles Teller) hiding out among the friendly hippies of Amity (which is kind of like a Humboldt retreat center). Almost immediately, thugs from the Dauntless and Erudite factions show up in armored trucks and start raising hell. Tris, Four and Caleb escape and make their way back into the city. Along the way, they're forced to fight it out with some factionless street-rat kids, who eventually take them into the fold. There's quite a bit of precipitous and inelegant plot-meandering along the way, which all amounts to Tris being the most important, most powerful individual in Chicago — maybe the world. No spoiler.

The costuming, set decoration and overall design of Insurgent are almost impressive and immersive enough to carry the show, but not quite. Likewise the strong performances from Woodley and Teller, talented actors both. But the pacing, the rickety and over-loaded plot, and the strangely blithe attitude toward violence undermine the movie's positive attributes. PG13. 119m.

PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT REMINDER

Property Tax 2nd Installment Payment becomes delinquent as of 5:00 pm on April 10, 2015

As was reported in a news release last fall, this year's Property Tax bills for the 2014-2015 tax year have an error on the second installment stub which states that the delinquent date is "after 12/10/2014" but it should read "after 4/10/2015." The correct date (April 10, 2015) is shown in red on the top half of your bill as well as on the back side in item number 8.

I apologize for this error and any confusion it may have caused. The format of the bills was changed significantly this year to reflect the same format used in many other counties around the state. Unfortunately with all the formatting corrections the wrong date was inserted back onto the second installment stub by our contract printer, and we missed it on the proof since it had previously been correct. I assume full responsibility for the mistake as it should have been fixed prior to going to print.

NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property.

NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call PRIME PACIFIC at (707) 468-5300. You may also visit our website - primepacificforeclosures.com. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the website. THE BEST WAY TO VERIFY POSTPONEMENT INFORMATION IS TO ATTEND THE SCHEDULED SALE.

The mortgagee or beneficiary is not required to give notice under CA Civil Code Section 2923.5.

Zombies and Natural Born Killers

By Anthony Westkamper
humbug@northcoastjournal.com

Zombie Dung Flies

While working in my front yard, I noticed insects flying around at ankle height. Soon enough one landed. I identified it as the familiar 'golden dung fly' (Scathophaga stercoraria). As its name implies, its life revolves around animal droppings, especially those of large herbivores. They spend their larval stage feeding on it, and as adults hang around preying on other insects attracted to it, finally laying the eggs of the next generation in it. They are agile aerial hunters. I have seen them taking insects as large as themselves on the wing. While they are not aggressive toward humans (we're a tad large for them to carry off), I can attest they bite if mishandled.

So, what's with the "zombie" thing? I went hunting with my macro lens and took pictures of everything including some of this species posing, some with prey and, finally, some perched atop some of the tallest sprigs of grass in my recently mowed lawn, dead. Many of the deceased ones were covered with a clumpy white growth, especially where the plates of their exoskeletons joined. A bit of online research indicated it was most likely Entomophthora muscae. This fungus infiltrates the bodies, feeds on the tissues, enters the central nervous system and causes the insect to land, climb to the top of a tall sprig, lock up and finally die. The fungus then erupts through the soft parts of the body and disperses its spores to attack another generation of flies.

Killer Wrigglers

Last night I mercilessly killed a couple hundred of the deadliest animals on the planet, maybe averted a plague and fed the hungry. I hardly worked up a sweat. Statistically, more human deaths (not to mention misery) are caused annually by mosquito borne diseases than those carried by any other critter. At last count they average 725,000 human deaths per year. I netted a couple hundred wrigglers (a common name for mosquito larvae) from a tray under some plants where rainwater had accumulated. Looking at the stinking, tea brown water full of rotting leaves, you'd think it was too nasty for anything above algae on the evolutionary chart live in. That's just how they like it. Their mothers seek out such water in which to lay eggs. A few days later they hatch into tiny little wrigglers. After five moults, they change to the pupal form (tumblers), finally emerging into the adult form we all know and loathe. That bad brew is their big trick. Suspended head-down at the top of the water, they poke a snorkel through the surface film and breathe air. This allows them to inhabit places too oxygen deficient and polluted for fish and other aquatic insects to survive. There they are free of competitors and predators.

INFECTED DUNG FLIES.

Our native North Coast mosquitoes don't carry many of the really nasty tropical diseases associated with them. They can, however, carry things like canine heartworm, bird malaria, and western equine encephalitis. We really don't know what other potential pathogens they might transmit, some of which might be yet undiscovered. So, 'tis the season to tip over those old tires, flower pots, unused kiddie pools and untended bird baths, and fill in puddles and wallows. While we can't eradicate them, we can reduce the numbers near our homes, since adults seldom fly far from spawning waters. This is no small thing. You, too, can kill thousands of the most vile and vicious parasites in the world. I fed mine to my goldfish humming the theme from Jaws. ●
